BIO: Michael is an award-winning and best-selling author, historian, drum journalist, documentary film producer and musician with over 25 years of playing experience. He currently works as a session and performing player for the band Question Everything (QE) and as an independent/sub.

Michael has performed at the Mellon Jazz Festival, competed at the National Marching and Stage Band competitions in Nashville and marched as a high school senior with the University of Pittsburgh drum line. Michael also played in Pittsburgh's esteemed MJF all-star student ensemble with Jeff Watts (Brandon Marsalis) and Steve Turne (SNL Band).

A finalist for the 2013 International Book Awards, Michael has written seven books and produced three documentary films. His book "FUNDamentals of Drumming for Kids" won Best in Show at the National Associations of Music Merchants (NAMM) and has been an Amazon Best-Seller for 'Percussion.'

Michael has also contributed essays and articles to over a dozen magazines and periodicals including Drumhead and Modern Drummer. He is available for writing commissions. Michael specializes in historical studies and interviews.

As a historian and music educator, Michael guest lectures at universities, theaters, libraries and museums. Michael is also an active blogger and YouTube member.

Steve Jordan

Steve Jordan is fast becoming one of my favorite drummers. His sense of time and groove is amazing. Whether playing in the studio, on television, or on tour, Jordan has established himself as a go-to guy. Drums has a great bio posted on Jordan: <http://www.drummagazine.com/drummers/steve-jordan/>. In his instructional DVD The Groove Is Here, Jordan outlined his philosophy for playing: "Simplicity is not stupidity," he said, "Just because something sounds
